Overview

Divination cards drop from monsters and loot containers. They are stackable, tradeable items that take up 1x1 inventory space. A full set of cards can be vendored to Tasuni in Highgate or Navali at your hideout in exchange for the item referenced on the card. Each card type drops in specific areas of Wraeclast, so farming said area allows for the player to maximize their chances of obtaining the desired item. Additionally, divination cards are affected by the drop rate penalty.^[1] Character level is never considered to be higher than 68 in regards to drop rate penalty, meaning that high level characters (68+) can farm world areas in later acts without severe drop rate penalties. For example if the monster level is 66 there is a 0% drop rate penalty, and in zones with level 56 monsters there is a 25% drop rate penalty.

Rewards

Divination cards that award an item whose level depends on the player's level, are capped at item level 80.^[2] If a set of divination cards awards a corrupted item, then the corruption effect is guaranteed to be an implicit mod with the exception of maps, which cannot have implicit mods.^[3]

League-specific items can be obtained from divination cards with a generic description.^[4] For example, Shadows and Dust, which was a Rampage-exclusive drop, can be acquired by turning in Jack in the Box. This is only true for items that dropped league-wide. Items that only drop from specific monsters, such as Atziri-exclusive unique items or Breachlord rewards, or items that only dropped from opening league-specific loot containers, such as Zerphi's Last Breath, cannot be obtained from divination cards with generic descriptions. This includes  Time-Lost Relic. League-specific currency items however, can not be obtained from divination cards with a generic description. For example players can't get  Perandus Coin through  Emperor's Luck.
